GOLDSTEIN HAYES, LLC
TRIAL LAWYERS

As we begin a new year, we want to take a moment to say thank you for trusting us during what was likely one of the most challenging times in your life. That trust is something we never take lightly.

You may notice a refreshed look from us this year, including a new logo and a slightly updated name: Goldstein Hayes. This change comes as our longtime partner and friend, Jared Lina, moves on to a new chapter in his career. After more than 12 years of shared success and countless lives impacted, we are incredibly grateful for the time Jared spent with the firm. He has been a wonderful colleague to Jimmy and Jonathan, and while he will be missed, we wish him nothing but the very best in his next venture.

While our name and branding have evolved, what has not changed is our commitment to standing up for people when they need it most. The same attorneys, the same values, and the same dedication to our clients remain at the heart of everything we do. As we move into the year ahead, our focus continues to be on providing thoughtful, compassionate advocacy and helping injured individuals and families navigate difficult situations with confidence and clarity.

We're grateful to stay connected with you, and we appreciate you keeping Goldstein Hayes in mind if someone you care about ever needs guidance or support.

Here's to a healthy and safe year ahead.

Why Insurance Companies Push Quick Settlements—Especially at the Start of the Year

After an accident, it's not uncommon for an insurance company to reach out quickly with what may seem like a reasonable settlement offer. For many people—especially when medical bills or missed work are piling up—this can feel like a welcome relief. But there's an important reason insurers often move fast, particularly at the beginning of the year.
Insurance companies are businesses, and their goal is to resolve claims for as little as possible. Early settlement offers are often made before the full extent of injuries is known or before long-term medical needs, future treatment, or lasting effects are fully understood. Once a settlement is accepted, it typically cannot be revisited—even if new complications arise.

January is a time when insurers are especially motivated to close files and clear their books. That urgency can work against injured individuals who may still be in the early stages of recovery and don't yet have a complete picture of what their case is truly worth.
Taking the time to understand your rights and the long-term impact of an injury is critical. Having someone review the details, gather the necessary information, and deal directly with the insurance company can help ensure decisions are made with the full picture in mind—not just what's easiest in the moment.

If you or someone you know is ever injured, it's important to remember that a quick offer isn't always the best one.

Client Testimonial

"I'm incredibly thankful for Mr. Hayes and his entire team. When other law firms turned us away, they stepped in and supported our family every step of the way — not just as clients, but like we were their own. It's rare these days to call a business and actually speak to a real, caring person, but that's exactly what you get here. If you're looking for a responsive, compassionate legal team that treats you like family — not just a case number — look no further. Highly recommended!"

Client Wins & Milestones From the Past Year

Last year, our team helped clients recover more than $30 million—including a $9.3 million verdict late in the year. While every case is different, our approach remains the same: preparation, persistence, and principled advocacy.

Grateful for Your Trust—This Year and Always

As we begin a new year, we're reminded that the most meaningful part of our work isn't just the cases we handle, but the relationships we build along the way. Many of the people who find their way to Goldstein Hayes do so because someone they trust shared our name—and that confidence means everything to us. When a former client speaks highly of their experience, it reinforces why we do this work and motivates us to continue showing up with care, diligence, and respect for every person we serve.

As the year ahead unfolds, we remain committed to being a steady, reliable resource for those navigating difficult moments. We're grateful to stay connected with you and truly appreciate the trust you place in our firm.

Thank you for being part of the Goldstein Hayes story as we move into the new year.
